"The result of the gradual increase in sinkings was that the German naval morale blew up." said Captain Stirling. Speaking of the effect of the entry of the United States into the war, Captain Stirling said: "The system of convoying merchant ships had not been put into operation, and the sinking of inerchant tonnage was almost half a million tons a month.

"In June, 1917, the British conceded the convoy system, and it went into operation. Up to that time they had been afraid of 'butting all their eggs in one basket.' The effect of the convoy system was an immediate reduction in the number of sinkings."

Referring to the navy's part in transporting the army overseas Captain Stirling said: "The transport system started from notining under Vice Admiral Gleaves. At the time the armistice was signed transport convoys of fifty ships were carrying over two complete divisions at a time."

Captain Stirling declared that naval power was one of the most decisive instruments in history, and should never be relinquished.

Owing to the fact that 185 members of the society are still with the colors in France, the board of managers of the Sons of the Revolution dispensed with the formal banquet.

Banners carried to victory in the Revolutionary War and the War of 1812 decorated the room where the entertainment was held. Among these was a standard carried with Washington's forces at Valley Forge.

The members present were given a shock by the Rev. Horace Percy Silver, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, who declared that such societies were too apt to anchor in the past and forget the present.

"It should be your duty to take the common people in to share your ideals for mutual betterment and not make the common people in to share your ideals for mutual betterment and not make the common people in to share your ideals for mutual betterment and not make the common people in to share your ideals for mutual betterment and not make the content of

Miss Grace Edmond, former prima donna of "Oh! Oh! Delphine" and well and favorably known in vaudeville, is to be the stellar attraction at the Concert Dinner Dance at Murray's Roman Gardens on Sunday evening, February 23. She will sing songs of Old Ireland and songs of Old New YOFE, also excerpts from favorite comic operas and musical comedies, in her own charming, winsome way.

comedies, in her own charming, winsome way.

Riccardo Venanzi, the tenor with the marvellous voice, and Max Rosenzweig, violin soloist, will again appear, as also the ever popular C. Carroll Clark and his breezily entertaining Creole Serenaders. The rest of the programme is well arranged and designed to please both the lovers of music and the dancing enthusiasts.

Golden Glades

Golden Glades

Clever specialties, combined with a distinctive east, go towards making the Victory Revue, at Thomas Healy's Golden Glades, Broadway and Sixty-sixth Street, one of the snappiest and best balanced entertainments on Broadway. Diners who have viewed the revue are unanimous in that the production is the most pretentious ever sponsored to Mr. Healy. The entertainment might well be termed "two shows in one," for it is, Both parts of the show are given over to a dazzling ice revue, featuring such skating stars of international repute as Elsie and Paulsen, in the sensational apache dance on skates; Cathleen Pope, Judels and Peterson, and the famous skating sextette. The latter also give a reproduction of a hockey match that combines all the skill and frills of a genuine contest. A tabloid musical comedy section follows in which Helen Hardick, Bly Brown, Yvonne Darle and Harry Francis, in an amusing antiprohibition number, share stellar honors.

Reisenweber's The New Edition Revue of 1919

The New Edition Revue of 1919 in the main dining room at Reisenweber's, Fifty-eighth Street and Columbus Circle, is a departure in revue production and may be classed in the category of a musical comedy. The costumes, the lighting effects and the music were unusual. Earl Lindsay was responsible for the staging and Louis Silvers for the music. Midgie Miller, the soubrette, in a new role was as bewitching as ever, and her grace asserted itself even more than at her previous appearance at Reisenweber's. Leon Fastovsky, the tenor, was well received. Loretta Rhodes, the prima donna, was daintiness itself personified and Margaret Severin introduced remarkable novel dances and the Crance Sisters, who made their first appearance on Broadway, were the cause of much praise.

Martinique

A novel method in the form of a voting contest has been inaugurated by Gus Edwards in his "Springtime Version of Attaboy" at the Hotel Version of Attaboy" at the Hotel Martinique to discover which are the most popular principals and chorus girls in the new revue that in two weeks has become the talk of Broadway. Originality and progressiveness being Producer Edwards's watchwords, he has decided that the winners in this original stant in the cabaret field will not go unrewarded. Therefore the fortunate chorus girl will be elevated from the ranks to a principal's rôle and distinction at the close of the contest, while the winning principal will receive a substantial increase in salary.

The balloting takes place during every performance, each girl in the company passing out post cards with her photo and vote thereon to the various guests in the room during the rendition of an original "letter carrierette" number.

Café de Paris

The Café de Paris, once the famous Rector's, has reached a situation in its interesting history which is psychological and spells success. It of all the great Broadway establishments has always been and always will be the acknowledged dancing centre. Broadway is experiencing the greatest dancing period in its history, and the Café de Paris is at the very zenith of its popularity.

Prince George Hotel

Lovers of Boston baked beans, New England mine pie and other dishes for which the northeast corner of our country is justly famous, will welcome the new dining room recently opened by Mr. George H. Newton, manager of the Prince George Hotel.

From the colonial sign at the entrance on Madison Avenue to the old prints and models of famous stips with which the room is decorated, the atmosphere is typically colonial, and Manager Newton promises that the food which comes from his kitchens will do credit to the reputation which New England holds for good things to eat. The old pictures on the walls have a real historic interest, and depict quaintly and graphically the bygone days in many New England towns and other cities throughout the United States.

Mr. Newton is unusually well fitted to transplant to a metropolitan hotel a bit of the real New England. His long experience as manager of the Parker House, one of Boston's famous hotels, has given him a first-hand acquaintance with all that is typically New England.
